The first part of the manuscript discusses the nature of the soul and its immortality. It argues that the soul is a simple, indivisible substance that cannot be destroyed. This is because it is not composed of parts and therefore cannot be broken apart. The author also discusses the soul's ability to know and understand, suggesting that it is a higher form of knowledge than that of the senses.

The second part of the manuscript continues the discussion on the soul's immortality and its relationship to the body. It explores the idea of the soul's ascent to heaven and its eventual reunion with God. The author also touches upon the concept of the soul's purification and the role of the body in this process.
